MA'S WAY.

W'en Jane got married an' then went
T' live in town, I b'lieve it sent
A knife o' pain, right through ma's heart,
An' I cud see 'twas hard t' part
'Ith one she loved, though naught she said
But done fer me an' pa an' Ned.

When Ned got killed by Johnson's mare
Th' snow lit thick on ma's smooth hair
An' made it white, but though his face
Wus missed at meals we filled his place
By settin' wide, an', as she had,
Ma done fer jest myself an' dad.

When pa wus called t' silent land
I thort 'at ma 'ud never stand
So great a shock, but still she kep'
About her work, an', though she wep'
As women will 'at trouble see,
She went right on an' done fer me.

I ain't b'lievin' in a hell,
Or in th' heav'n 'at some folks tell,
All paved 'ith gold—but seems t' me
There's life beyond fer sech as we,
An' there I'll see, as here no more,
Ma, happy, doin' fer us four.

AFTER MANY YEARS.

BY MRS. W. K. CLIFFORD.

A little red brick house near Goldalmining, with a porch to its front door and a wooden balcony to the upper windows. Striped sunblinds and a creeper, a tiled roof and a lighting conductor. Close to the house, flower-beds, trim and bright with marigolds and sweet peas; round it, yet standing a little off like sentinels, straight and tall, dark fir trees.

In the drawing-room of the little house a woman waited; she had waited half her lifetime for the meeting that was to take place this afternoon. She was neither young nor pretty; her hair was grizzled, and her face marked by lines of care and sorrow. Yet time had been tender and left her a charm that half compelled love, though the reserve that was natural to her gently kept any expression of it unspoken.

She walked up and down and lingered and listened with the happy anxiety of a woman who knows that their is only a little time to wait and then a footstep is certain to fall upon her ear. She raised her eyes and looked round the room and was satisfied. It was cool and shady, for the sun-blind over the wide-open window kept out the glare and stifling heat; the chintz covers were fresh, the flowers sweet-smelling in the Italian pots; there were books and pictures and rustic chairs and cushions; everywhere, within and without, was the effect of drowsy stillness that is summer's own.

"My little home, my dear little home," she said to herself, "to think that he will see it at last." A smile came to her lips, though tears were in her voice. She clasped her hands and leaned her foolish head down on the back of her chair and hid her face. "Oh, my dear, my dear!" she whispered; to think that we shall meet again after all these years. To think that I shall see your face and hear your voice—your dear voice—once more. Perhaps you will find fault with me just as you used," and she laughed softly for joy. "I don't care—I don't care one little atom what you do to me so that it is you who do it—." She started up in dismay, for there entered without any warning a woman, middle-aged also, and in a widow's bonnet. She had the air of having come a journey.

"Oh Mary!" Miss Roberts exclamed, half drawing back; "I did not expect you. Why didn't you write? Some one is coming; I am engaded—indeed I am this afternoon."

The visitor laughed, and showed a dimple in her happy face. Sorrows had evidently been only incidents to her, borne easily and recovered from pleasantly.

"You are very inhospitable," she said. I have come literally for ten minutes, between the two afternoon trains. I walked from the station and entered by the stable gate. I wouldn't risk a telegram, because I wanted your answer."

"What is it?" Miss Roberts asked, still dismayed and listening the while for the sound of wheels stopping by the porch.

"The Milfords have lost their father and can't go to Switzerland. They were to start to-morrow; had taken circular tickets for a month. They want to give them to us; they came into heaps of money and can afford it. I agreed to accept them provided you would go, too. We have not been together since we were girls, that time when John Alwyn went with us all to Cornwall—"

"Oh, Mary, I can't. John Alwyn is coming this afternoon." The tears were in Miss Roberts' eyes; she put her arms round her friend's neck and trembled with excitement. "He wrote to me," she went on. "He has taken a little place, called Heatherway, five or six miles off. He asked if he might come. After all these years, Mary, we are going to meet once more," she whispered.

Mrs. Norton looked at her bewildered.

"But—but he cannot be anything to you now, Georgie? All that was over long ago."

"He is the whole world," Miss Roberts answered, still in a whisper. "I have lived my life waiting for him. Oh, Mary," she said, and gave a long sigh, "it is samething even to say his name aloud."

Mrs. Norton was wonderstruck.

"I never knew why you cared for him so much, nor why you parted."

"He is just my life." Miss Roberts went on, as if she had not heard, and with a smile that was like a flicker of sunshine when the hoar-frost first begins, "and he will be till—till they draw down the blinds for me. That is one reason why I live alone. I have felt that some day he would come back, and would not like anyone to see his coming. It was my fault that we parted," she added. "I had a thousand faults; I wasn't good enough, or pretty enough, or clever enough for him."

She poured out her words, after the silence of long years.

"What nonsense, Georgie! Why! you were the cleverest of us all; you could do anything you liked. Everyone said, when you wrote that article on Normandy, how clever it was; and the illustrations, too—you might have made a career as an artist; and you were so pretty—though I think you are beautiful now, with your tall, thin figure and gray hair."

"I wonder if I really was pretty?" Miss Roberts looked longingly toward the glass, as, remembering the part of hostess, she rang for tea. "If I had been," she continued, as the servant left the room, "he would have come before." There was almost a sob in her voice, the dry sob of hungry love; as if to steady it, she put her hand on Mrs. Norton's and sat down on the low couch beside the window. The sun-blind projected outward at the bottom enough to let in the scent of the heliotrope in the bed beneath it. "Mary," she said, "it is three and-twenty years since I last set eyes on him, yet my whole life has been lived mentally in his sight. I have striven so hard—everything I have done well has been put before him with a petition in my heart that said; 'Won't this win you back and prove to you that I was worth better love than you gave me?' But the plea has seemed to go out like Noah's dove, and to come back unheard and unnoticed."

"Nonsense! What did he ever do in the world himself? I have heard nothing of him for years; but we all know that he failed in science and lived a lazy life in town on the money his father left him,"

"A comtemplative life is often more useful than an active one," Miss Roberts pleaded. "Don't say things against him." and she put out her hand entreatingly. "I do not know why, but I think, somehow, he cares for me still; and, though it could only mean friendship and a now-and-then meeting, it would be compensation for all the years of waiting."

"Cares for you!" Mrs. Norton exclamed, scornfully; "if he does he would have come to you before this, or he hasn't the courage of a mouse. Well, my dear, the train won't wait for me; I must go. Of course, you can decide nothing till you have seen him. Telegraph before seven this evening 'Yes' or 'No.' about Switzerland." She looked down at Miss Roberts' white hands, and up at her face. "Not good enough for you! Georgie, we woman are sad fools, and our reward is accordingly." But Miss Roberts only looked back at her with the expression of one who is waiting to see Heaven, and that it is very near.

Then suddenly there was heard the sound of a light carriage. The friends looked at each other silently. The wheels stopped before the house.

"Go, Mary," Miss Roberts whispered; "I want to see him alone."

Mrs. Norton kissed her, and without a word slipped out of the side door by which she had entered the house, before the servant had crossed the little hall to admit the new arrival.

Miss Roberts stood still, her heart beating, her hands trembling. There were heavy footsteps, the door was opened and she heard the servant say:

"Mr. Alwyn."

She drew a long breath. There was no mistake; the years of silence and parting had come to an end.

There entered a man of middle height, stout and red faced, clean shaven and double chinned, with a fringe of gray hair round his bald head. She almost started. Was this John Alwyn? The man she remembered had been slim and black haired, with an almost supercilious expression on his dark face and refinement in every line of it. This one looked commonplace and middle class, almost vulgar. Could this be the one round whom she had built up all the romance of her life, this John Alwyn? She almost laughed out, it was so absurd; she nearly burst into tears, it was so tragic.

"Oh!" she said, with a little gasp. "It is you—it is Joan Alwyn?"

"Yes, that's it," he said with a smile, more ready than in the old day. "How do you do? You were surprised to get my letter, weren't you? I don't believe you knew me for a moment. I've altered a good deal, you see; there's more of me than there was, for one thing.' He laughed as though he thought it a pleasant joke, and looked at her with good-natured amazement.

"It's long since we met." She almost fell into the chair opposite him, and stared half foolishly at his face.

"Twenty-three years, must be. Why, you have grown gray, too, and you are thin. Have you been ill?"

"I am always thin," she answered, with a little smile, "and gray—of course I am gray. I am growing old."

"Well, so am I," he said, with cheery resignation, and he looked at her critically while she poured out some tea. "I am afraid we are both getting on. I was fifty-six last birthday, and time has not only made my hair gray, but taken it off for me, which is worse; and you see it has made me as fat as it has made you thin. But tell me the news. I never came across any of your people, and was too lazy to look them up. Are things in general all right?"

"Oh, yes, thank you; they are all right," she answered, still wondering whether she were awake and in her senses. "But I want to hear about you, John—you don't expect to be called Mr. Alwyn?" she asked, with the little courteous manner that was peculiar to her.

"Mr. Alwyn! I should think not. We are old friends— we were sweethearts once, you know, Georgie."

"Yes," she said, in a low voice.

"Pretty girl you were, too,—nice figure and plenty to say, clever girl, too—rather too clever for my taste, if the truth must be told. I thought it a mistake when you took to—well, to overdoing it, you know. I don't care about women who write articles in magazines and draw pictures for publication; I don't mind if they do a few drawings to hang on the walls—that's different."

"Oh, yes,—quite different."

"And how is it you never married? You must be rather lonely living here alone; I wonder you don't get a niece or too to cheer you up. You must have some by this time?"

"Oh, yes, there are the nieces, of course. How did you know I lived alone?" she asked, feeling as if all the illusions of her life were being broken into little bits and scattered at her feet. Mr. Alwyn put down his cup and took some cake before he answered. There was an old-fashionedness about him that she had not noticed in other men of his age, and his manner had deteriorated; its refinement had gone with his reserve and his sternness.

"Heard it from the parson. That's how I got your address. I knew you were about here, for I got it some years ago from Jack Lawrence's wife; but I had forgotten it. I've taken a little place six miles off—Heatherway it is called."

"I thought it must be you."

"I dare say you thought, too, that I should come and see you?" he said, dropping the crumbs of his cake on the peacock-blue carpet. "I waited till we were to rights and then drove over. I wanted a talk with you."

"Yes," and she waited. Something told her that there was more to come.

"Well, the fact is, I'm married," he said, firmly, evidently relieved in having got it out. "But I haven't told anyone about it; that's one reason why I bought Heartherway. I wanted to come among people who didn't know her. She—she—well, it's no use beating about the bush—she kept house for me a good many years. She was a widow, husband drowned at sea, and she had to go out and do something for herself; so she came and looked after my crib in town, and we got to like each other. She knew how to make me comfortable, and that's everything to a man at my time of life. We got married on the quiet four or five years ago, and she kept out of the way when anyone came who had known her as the housekeeper. But that wasn't the right sort of way to treat your wife."

"No," said Miss Roberts, faintly, and gathered up her cashmere skirt, for the train had spread itself out as if to give effect to her graceful figure.

"So I thought," he continued, "that I'd take a little place in the country and set up properly with her; she's a fine-looking woman; knows how to dress herself, and ought to go down very well in the country. I've brought her portrait to show you." He dug into the breast-pocket of his dark tweed coat and pulled out a cabinet size photograph, then felt for his pocket-handkerchief and wiped his forehead and the back of his neck. "Tea is not very cooling on a day like this," he said, apologetically. But she was looking at the photograph of her old love's wife, and did not hear him. It represented a well-developed woman of two or three and forty, with a quantity of hair, and a fringe, thick and dark, that fell low on her forehead. She wore a black satin dress, trimmed with something that had come out in white stripes; there were rings in her ears, and at her throat a brooch too large for the present fashion. She looked like a solid, slow-of-movement, good tempered woman with keen, business-like eyes and an air of easy enjoyment.

"She's considered rather handsome," he said.

"That is why you fell in love with her?" Miss Roberts looked up and tried to satisfy him with her manner.

"Fell in love?" he repeated. "Well, not quite so far as that. I don't believe in it, you know; never did, or years ago I should have fallen in love with you, Georgie, for you were a pretty girl enough, that's certain; but I'll own that I'm fond of her. She's a nice, sensible woman, has plenty to say, and is an excellent manager. Well, now, I want you to come and see us and do what you can with the neighborhood. She has rather a fancy to know people, so I said to her: 'Unless I'm mistaken, there's an old sweetheart of mine a few miles off, a younger sister of my friend, Sir William Roberts. I always liked her, and I feel sure she will gladly do what she can for the soke of old times.' So now, when will you come, Georgie?"

"I will come soon," she answered.

"I knew you would," he said triumphantly.

"But," she went on, "I fear it can't be till I come back from Switzerland. I start to-morrow," she added hurriedly.

"That's a pity," he looked dismayed, "for we have just got straight, and the garden looks nice, and she thought it would be a good idea to give a garden-party while the summer held out, and we thought that folks would like to come. People usually enjoy a garden-party—at least, I always did."

"Yes, but you must wait till you have been called upon and returned visits before you can invite people," she said, gently. She was beginning to be sorry for him. His life and his satisfaction in it were so amazing to her; not because his world did not include herself, but because she remembered the old fastidiousness that had once prevented everything from seeming good enough. He seemed to have stamped with his heavy, good-natured feet on all the conditions that had once been necessary to his existence.

"How long will you be away?"

"A month, perhaps."

"And you will let us know when you are back?" he asked, holding out his hand. "You'll do what you can for her, I know, for the sake of old times."

"Yes, I will do what I can."

"That's all right then," he said, with an air of having finished his business. "I told her you would manage it. There's some good in being a clever woman, after all, Georgie, though when I saw that article of yours—about Normandy, was it?—I said to muself: This is a pity; she'd much better leave this sort of thing to the young women at Girton.' Well, I must be going. She'll be anxious to hear the news, and we dine at seven—she's particular, keeps me in order," he laughed, "and doesn't like to be kept waiting." He got up and looked round the room. "Nice little place—dare say you ore very comfortable. Well, good-by."

"Good-by," she said, taking a long look at him, as if she were trying to see, far back behind the years, the face she remembered. "Good-by, but I will come and see you off," and she followed him to the front door.

A chaise stood by the porch, a boy was holding the pony's head. Miss Roberts reproached herself for not having sent it round to the stable after its journey, but there was no time for apologies. Mr. Alwyn settled himself into his seat with difficulty.

"The boy drives," he said. "I never understand these country ponies myself; this little beggar shied twice as we came along. Well, good-by, Georgie, glad to have seen you; and you'll come as soon as you are back, eh?"

"Yes; when I am back. Good-by."

She waved her hand and stood watching till the pony disappeared in the dip; then slowly she turned away, went back to the empty drawing room, and shut the room.—Demorest's Magazine.

After two years' search, during which the 19-year-old fugitive had grown a moustache, Sheriff Fahrenbach, of Berks county, arrested Jacob Christ, a fellow wanted in Reading for felonious assault, and who at first denied his identity.

OURSELVES AND NEIGHBORS.

HAPPENINGS IN FRANKLIN AND ADJOINING COUNTIES.

Gleaned From Our Exchanges—The News of the Cumberland Valley and Southern Pennsylvania, With a Few From Beyond Mason & Dixon's.

Chief of Police Comfort, Carlisle, received notice that William Pinegar, an Indian boy, who escaped from the Indian School, was captured in Chicago Tuesday last.

The directors of the Hagerstown Y. M. C. A. have dissolved the organization in that town for several reasons, the principal of which is that the association does not receive the encouragement it should. So the doors will be closed.

Capt. Jesse H. Sheets, the oldest passenger conductor on the Western Maryland Railroad, having filled that position for at least a third of a century, has retired on account of ill health and has been appointed ticket agent at Walbrook, Baltimore.

Exchanges in several places state that many counterfeit nickels are in circulation. They are made of babbit metal, with nickel finish and are lighter in weight than the genuine article. If thrown with some force on a hard substance the nickel covering breaks off and the counterfeit is discovered.

The jury of highest awards of the Cotton States and International Exposition at Atlanta, has issued an address to the public, calling attention to the educational value of the Exposition, its important relations to industry, and its manifold indications of the progress of the useful and liberal arts.

It is strange, but we all do it, that we wait until a man is dead before we make a search for his good qualities, A few kind words will do no hurt to extend to the living once in a while. After a man is dead he is apt to remain so. If you cannot say anything good of a man when he is living, you are certainly a hypocrite to say anything good of him after he is dead.

A valuable colt belonging to E. Keller Mentzer, farmer, near Edgemont, was running loose in the field when it tramped on the end of a piece of scantling about five feet long. The other end flew up and entered the colt's body to a depth of over fifteen inches. Veterinarian Poe, Leitersburg, stopped the flow of blood and the animal bids fair to recover.

Capt. L. H. Henkell has renewed the lease with Col. B. F. Winger for the "Duffield Mansion" farm, containing 210 acres on which he has lived for many years, for another long term, ending on the first day of April of the first year of the twentieth century. The farm is near Claylick and is one af the finest in the county. It is very productive and has been profitable to both owner and tenant.

Manon H. Carr, accompanied by his wife and two sons, went to Shaffer's Mountain, West Virginia, in search of Gensing, building a camp at night, which they covered with slabs. Between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning, a big maple tree 20 feet above the camp, broke and fell on the cabin. Mrs. Carr and her son, George, were killed instantly. The other son, Jesse, was fatally injured, and the father was badly hurt.

Edgar Martin, the 13-year-old son of David M. Martin, of Middlesex, Cumberland county, was attacked and bitten by a savage hog on the farm of J. C. Wengert, near Middlesex, recently. The hog bit him on the leg above the knee, inflicting a wound several inches long and an inch wide. Dr. George Hemminger, of Carlisle, was summoned and dressed the wound. At first the lad's life was despaired of, but he was reported yesterday to be doing finely.

Probably the oldest bootblack in the United States resides in Bedford, Pa. His name is Nelson Gates, and he was 99 years of age in June, and judging from his present state of health he is good for several years yet. He is a familiar figure around the court house, where he picks up a comfortable living for a large family by shining shoes and doing odd jobs in the different offices. "Nels" Gates was an old man as far back as the oldest inhabitant can remember.

On Thursday a horseless carriage built by the Crawford Manufacturing Company, Hagerstown, was shipped from that city. Several successful tests were made and the machine met all the requirements of a self-propelling vehicle. A few days ago George Alfred Townsend visited the Crawford Works in order to get data for newspaper work, and his description of this extensive industry with allusions to the horseless carriage and the tubular gear and pneumatic tire buggies is looked for with much eagerness.

To defend his mother during a petty quarrel on Thursday, Clark Hay shot his father, Farmer Howard Hay, of Neshannock township, Lawrence county, twice in the chest and groin. The victim will die. Five shots were fired and after the affray the elder Hay dragged himself to the home of a neighbor and asked for protection. The wife and mother disclaims all knowledge of the affair. When asked if he wanted his boy arrested, Hay begged that his son might be given a couple of days to get away if he wanted.

The survivors of the Seventh Penna. Cavalry held their 18th annual reunion in Pittsburg last week. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: Hugh Armstrong, Lancaster, president; John Myers, Marysville, first vice president; Abraham Dissinger, Marysville, second vice president; Capt. Geo. F. Stehlin, Orwigsburg, secretary, and Thomas McGovern, Carrick, treasurer. Lancaster was selected as the place for holding the next annual reunion of the association. Two companies of this regiment were from Cumberland county.

Hunters and others who frequent the woods at this time should be careful where they throw lighted matches, or start a fire, as the leaves and timber are very dry. Already disastrous fires have been occasioned by reckless persons throwing matches among the leaves, or in trying to smoke squirrels out of their holes. They should also be careful about pointing their guns. Several instances are already reported in which one hunter shot another. Having an imperfect view of his victim the shooter took the other fellow for a turkey or some other kind of game.

One of the worst disasters on the Middle Division of the P. R. R. in many years, occurred a short distance east of Newport about 2.10 Thursday morning last. A Huntingdon coal train going east was wrecked at that point, and the debris was run into by second No. 7, hauling mail west. Both engineer Daniel Wolfkill of Harrisburg, and firemen Hames of Altoona, of No. 7, were killed. Some eight of the clerks on the mail cars were badly injured, together with a conductor and one brakeman reported missing. The wreck took fire almost immediately and four mail cars, together with their contents were burned. The information at hand is meagre, but the above outline will give a faint idea of the casualty.

A well-known New York commission merchant who has been travelling round the country contracting for apples, in an interview with a Harrisburg Call representative, said: "The crop in the United States is the the largest ever produced. It is estimated that from 7,000,000 to 10,000,000 barrels will be gathered, or 1,000,000 to 3,000,000 barrels more than any previous year. The bulk of the crop will come from the west, notably from the states of Missouri, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa. Missouri has the largest crop, but Indiana and Illinois are nearly double those of last year, while the crop of Iowa has increased fully 50 per cent. New York state has a fair crop, but smaller than last year, Massachusetts is light, Pennsylvania has an exceedingly large and fine crop."

The soap swindlers who victimized a number of McConnellsburg people some days ago, came over to Mercersburg and did a successful business there. They would hand out a box containing a dozen small cubes of medicura soap which is manufactured in Chicago. The Mercersburg Journal says: "They would approach a house and ask for the madam, to whom they displayed the soap, saying that they were advertising it and for one dollar they could have the soap, and their choice on the following prizes which would be delivered in two weeks by them, viz: 25 yards of brussels carpet, set of china dishes, piano and hanging lamps, silverware, etc., and to say the least they caught a lot of 'suckers.'" The scamps drove a nice double team and made a rather swell appearance.

The long continued drouth has caused the water in the Susquehanna at Lock Haven to fall steadily until now it is probably as low as ever known at that place. The steam scow of the Queen's Run fire brick company, which runs from the works in Lock Haven to Queen's Run for the purpose of carrying fire clay from the mines, has been laid off on account of the low water as it is no longer possible to float the loaded scow at Queen's Run. On this account work in the mines has been suspended until there is a rise in the river. There is plenty of clay on hand at the brick works, however, and the laying off of the scow will not interfere with the operations of the plant. All the small streams in the country are drying up and never-failing springs are lower than they ever were known.

The Hagerstown fair produced its usual large crop of marriages. One minister married eight couples Thursday, one couple in the court house vault. The marriage license clerk Thursday isrued 24 licenses, a number of them to the following Franklin county people: Burton S. Daniel and Miss Nora Sellers, Waynesboro; Norman Layman, Greencastle, and Miss Amanda Myers, Middleburg; Samuel Armstrong and Miss Nora Palmer, Kauffman's; Clarence L. Barnhart and Miss Annie V. Saum, Marion; John Trumpour Dry Run, Md., and Miss Nora Shafer, Caseyville; Samuel A. Byers and Miss Jennie Mowen, Mercersburg; Abram L. Hunsecker and Miss Elizabeth Holden, Mercersburg; Alvin Lindsey and Miss Myrtle Garlinger, Greencastle, John E. Rock and Miss Ida Monn, Altodale.—Greencastle Press.

Under the provisions of the act of assembly quoted below, a movement is on foot to erect a monument in honor of the soldiers of Adams county, on the Public Square in Gettysburg. The matter will be in the hands of the G. A. R. Post there:

"Be it enacted, &c., That upon the petition of at least fifty of the citizens to the court of quarter sessions of any county in this Commonwealth, for the erection or completion of a monument in memory of the soldiers and sailors of the late war, it shall be the duty of said court to lay said petition before the grand jury, and if approved by two successive grand juries and said court, the county commissioners shall be authorized to erect, or complete any monument now partly erected but not completed, and maintain at the county seat, a suitable monument in memory of the soldiers and sailors of the late war of the rebellion from said county."

We clip from the Perry County Democrat the following: A most peculiar accident, with results that were serious, occurred Wednesday, the 23d inst., on the Wagoner's Gap road, near Beecher's Tavern. Three daughters and a son of Jacob Brown, residing on the same road, a mile northwest of Carlisle, were driving in a wagon to a spelling bee in North Middleton township. As they were descending a steep hill in the vicinity of Beecher's Tavern at a rapid rate, they collided with the team of Jacob Hemminger, who was coming toward Carlisle. Both teams were in the darkness and going very rapidly, so that the results were quite disastrous to all. The horses were torn loose from the vehicles, which were broken, and all five thrown out among the horses and vehicles. Fortunately neither of the horses became excited and remained passive until the occupants could extricate themselves from their dangerous position. Mr. Hemminger was slightly cut and two of the Brown girls bruised. The boys escaped injury but the youngest sister was badly hurt. In falling she struck her head at the base of the skull and was picked up unconscious. She was taken to her home and Dr. Bender summoned, he finding that she had sustained concussion of the brain. The young lady remained in a semi-conscious state all night but was somewhat better Thursday morning.

The Hagerstown Herald and Torch of Thursday last gives the following: Two serious runaway accidents occurred in Frederick county, Tuesday of last week. The first occurred between eleven and twelve o'clock at a point near Braddock, on the road between Frederick and Middletown. A son of Rev. Manning was on his way to Frederick driving a six horse team attached to a large farm wagon loaded with wheat. While coming down a steep hill near the mountain, the brake on the wagon got out of order and the team got beyond the control of the driver. The horses were forced to run, and in doing so the wagon went over an incline. The wagon was almost entirely demolished and two horses received broken legs. The contents of the wagon were scattered along the road, which resulted in considerable loss. After the accident it was found that the horses were so badly hurt as to necessitate killing them. The second accident was very similar to the first and happened only a short time afterward on the Shookstown road, also near the mountain. John Joy, of near Bellsville, was on his way to Frederick with a load of wheat, drawn by four horses attached to a large wagon. While coming down a hill the block of the wagon brake fell out, and the driver was unable to check the speed of the wagon, which frightened the horses and caused a runaway. One of the saddle horses had both legs broken, while another horse had one leg fractured, both being so badly injured that in order to relieve their suffering it was necessary to kill them. The wagon was also broken, but fortunately Mr. Joy escaped without being hurt. The loss in both instances was a heavy one to the owners of the horses.

THE COUNTY INSTITUTE.

County Superintendent Zumbro has made his announcements as to the County Institute which will convene in Rosedale opera house on the 11th of November.

The teachers of the public schools look forward to these annual gatherings with interest, and so do other people in the county who desire the success and advancement of these schools. To the county superintendent they are occasions of much anxiety. Not much praise does he receive if they are successful, but if there is failure on the part of a single instructor or lecturer, the blame is put upon him, and it is often unstinted.

A glance at the list of instructors and entertainers for the coming institute will show that no mistake has been made in the selections this year, and all the teachers who can attend the coming sessions may look forward to them with well grounded anticipations of a profitable week, if they have the desire to make it so, to themselves and pupils. It is to be hoped that there may not be a single absentee among the entire number.

In many counties the institute is the literary week of the year and this is true of some of the teachers in all the counties of the state. Rarely does any lecture course or other series of literary entertainments furnish so varied or so valuable entertainment as is obtained from educators by audiences of observant teachers, or from those who worthily occupy the lecture platform by audiences of intelligent people. If the time has not already gone by when people may be imposed upon by incompetents and quacks upon the rostrum, it is rapidly passing, and these worthies (or unworthies) will soon be unable to come where they can deceive or distress superentendents or bore or disgust teachers or other intelligent people.

The county institute of last year was one of the best ever held in the county. There is reason to hope that the coming one will measure up to, if it does not exceed, the last in general excellence.

A KINDLY LOCAL CAMPAIGN.

The course of the candidates for political office in this county must commend itself because of the entire absence of ugly personalities or dishonorable means, so far as we have learned, thus far. The campaign will soon close, and somebody must be defeated, and while the disappointment accompanying defeat will not be pleasant, it will be well that there shall be no heart-burnings because of unfair or unmanly conduct on the part of candidates toward each other.

Just now, in Fulton county, there is an unfavorable contrast with the campaign in this county, in that there are personalities that will be regretted by all who use them, after the campaign is over.

It is said that Franklin county has never had a campaign freer from disreputable practices than is the present one. May it continue so to the end, and may no future campaigns in the county be more objectionable than is the present one. Vinegar never catches flies, and manliness is its own reward.

THE MUNICIPAL affairs of Philadelphia are to be investigated by a Senate committee, commencing November 11. The investigation is upon the demand of the Citizens' Municipal Association which has charged improper administration in some of the city offices. If there has been dishonesty in the government it should be discovered and the guilty officials brought to account.

THE LIMIT of speed for sea-going vessels has probably not yet been reached, but the Russian torpedo boat Sokol which was recently built at Yarrow on the Thames has made the unexampled speed of 30 knots an hour. This is two and a-half knots faster than any other record. It is marvelous to think that a water speed has been reached that is equal to the average speed of railroad trains. And no one knows what the limit of speed will be.

THE HUNTINGDON JOURNAL is bitterly hostile to the candidacy of Judge Williamson for election to the President Judgeship of the Huntingdon-Mifflin district. His conduct in the campaign of 1890 when Dr. Atkinson and Captain Skinner were opposing candidates for congress has brought out a letter of Captain Skinner to Editor Nash in the Journal, in which it stated that Judge Williamson took money from the Captain for campaign expenses and then betrayed him. Mr. Culbertson, the Republican candidate in Mifflin county seems to be going through his canvass very smoothly. To an outsider it looks as though the contest is between him and Mr. Bailey, the Democratic candidate. It is an ugly three-cornered fight such as should not be in a judicial contest.

EVERY CITIZEN who is qualified should go to the polls on Tuesday and cast a ballot for the men he believes best fitted for the offices they seek. Indifference in the matter of voting is reprehensible.

THE DEATH of Samuel Josephs at his home in Philadelphia on Saturday removes one of the noted Democratic politicians of that city. He had been afflicted with cancer in the face for some time. Several weeks before his death one of his eyes which had become diseased was removed in the hope that he would have a respite from suffering, but not much if any relief was afforded; he suffered intensely until he became unconscious several days before his death. Mr. Josephs was 63 years old and had made his living out of politics almost from the time he was a voter and had became wealthy through the political influence he wielded. He leaves a widow and three children—two sons and a daughter. Though he was a practical politician in all that is implied by the term it is said his home life was exemplary. He was a devoted husband and a kind father.

The funeral took place on Tuesday, the ritual of the Episcopal church being used. The interment was in Mount Vernon cemetery.

Of the coterie of politicians of which he was one, and which wielded a powerful influence in the politics of the state and city only Squire William McMullen is left.

TOWN AND TOWNSHIP.

The Events of the County as Chronicled by "Review" Correspondents—Summary of the Week's News.

QUINCY.

Thursday morning of last week Ottie McCleary, daughter of Alice Moats, aged about 7 years, took some matches out of the house at her home near Tomstown and made a fire in the lot among some leaves and brush. Her clothing caught fire and at once she began to scream. Her mother went to her assistance as soon as she heard her but when she reached the child the clothes were nearly all burned off its body. The little one's face was burned and the hair on the back of the head was burnt off. The mother also had her hands burned very badly in trying to extinguish the flames. The child is suffering a great deal of pain at this writing; Friday, but we hope she may recover again.

Mrs. Catharine, wife of Abraham Wile, Sr., died at her home in Altodale October 20, after an illness of one year and two months from consumption. She was a good neighbor, a kind and loving mother and a member of the U. B. church at Altodale. She raised a family of four sons, Jacob R., Abraham R., John and Philip, and six daughters, Mrs. James A. Beatty, Mrs. Wm. Martin, Mrs. Daniel C. Bonebrake, Misses Mary, Agnes and Josephine Wile. She was aged 61 years, 9 months and 20 days. Her body was laid to rest in the Altodale graveyard Tuesday morning, her four sons acting as the pall-bearers. Her pastor, Rev. J. W. Kiracofe, preached the funeral sermon in the U. B. church. The funeral was largely attended.

Bessie, youngest daughter of J. C. and Susan Lohman, died at her home at Tomstown, Saturday, ten minutes before 12 o'clock, after an illness of only forty-eight hours from scarlet fever. Bessie was at school Thursday forenoon and complained of feeling unwell and in the afternoon remained at home and took her bed. One sad incident in connection with her death was the absence from home of her father at the time she died. Mr. Lohman is employed by the Frick Company, Waynesbororo, and during the brief illness of his daughter was engaged in erecting machinery for the company in Virginia. Although a message was sent to him Friday evening announcing the serious illness of his child, he did not reach home until the following evening, then to find his daughter in death's grasp. Bessie was a good, bright, kind-hearted little girl and will be much missed in her family. She was about 14 years old and her remains were interred in Price's graveyard Sunday afternoon, the funeral being private. The family has the sympathy of the entire community in the loss of its little girl.

Bessie, again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled;
Then in heaven, with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed.

I'm content and you must be,
Since from death you cannot flee.
I would not give what I have gained
For all the world of grief and pain.

Many a vacant spot there'll be
When you my face no more can see.
But think that now I have a place
Where I can see my Saviour's face,

The Quincy band's excursion to Baltimore Saturday over the Western Maryland railroad was certainly a success, as we are informed by one of the members that the train carried 575 passengers. The members of the band are all young men and worked very hard within the past two months to make the excursion a success. The large number of tickets sold prove that they have been well paid for their efforts and are to be congratulated upon the undertaking of getting up an excursion.

Geo. C. Walk, who teaches the Tomstown school, closed it Friday last on account of scarlet fever. Within the past few weeks the disease has been in several families but only in a mild form, with the exception of that in J. C. Lohman's where the fever proved fatal. We believe that every effort should be made to prevent this malady from spreading.

William Harshman near Quincy, put up a frame chicken house, 7x9 feet, on his property last week. Samuel C. Rock and William Harshman did the carpenter work.

The German Baptist Brethren, held their love feast at Hayd's meeting-house Saturday last. The day was a very pleasant one and the meeting was well attended.

Miss Blanche Young and her pupils, at Grove Hill school house planted eight trees on the school grounds arbor day. Miss Young is surely deserving of praise for this good work.

Our worthy county superintendent, W. F. Zumbro, was visiting some of our township schools Monday and Tuesday of last week. We hope he found them all in a flourishing condition.

The following named pupils of Grove Hill school, taught by Miss Blanche Young, were present every day during the first month of the term: Minnie Rines, Rose Gordon, Maggie Friedley, Grace Gordon, Barbara Cook Nellie Funk, Elsie Funk, Ella Newcomer, Julia Cook, Leslie Jacobs, Daniel Newcomer, Harry Weaver, Roy Myers, Harry Biesecker and David Overcash.

SCOTLAND.

Miss Mary Slichter, a teacher in the Harrisburg public schools, and her brother Charles, of Annville College, spent Sabbath with their parents here.

John G. Youst has recovered from his recent severe illness.

H. S. Roth of Middletown, Dauphin county, spent Sabbath in Scotland.

Workmen are engaged in tearing out the plumbing in the Industrial School buildings. They say the first job was very incomplete, much of the work was done wrong, so it failed to answer the purpose for which it was intended, and now it must be overhauled.

The Scotland U. B. Sabbath school will render the following program on Rallying Day, November 17: Opening address by Roy Pentz; addresses or recitations by Misses Maggie Shields, Edna Stumbaugh and Myrtle Garman; "The relation of Parents to the Sunday School," M. E. Batten; "Some hindrances to Successful Sunday School Work," Jno. Howard; "The Influence of the Sunday School on the Community, Mrs. Cleffman; "The Model Teacher," H. A. Bitner; "Something in the Bible for children," by eight girls; "The Relation of the Church Member to the Sunday School," Mrs. Sadie Hammel; "The Model Sabbath School," Rev. J. E. Cleffman. The program will be interspersed with excellent music and the whole affair will be one of rare interest and enjoyment. The exercises will take place in the morning.

Mrs. West, a returned missionary, will deliver a free lecture in the U. B. church Tuesday evening, November 5. Subject, "Africa and Her People." The lecture is said to be a most excellent one and it is hoped it will be liberally patronized.

UPTON.

Bruce Barnhart and family, Greencastle, have moved to this place. Mr. Barnhart will take charge of Barnhart Bros. store and the postoffice of which he was appointed postmaster on Saturday last.

Cyrus Bell and mother, Williamsport, Md., spent Sunday with friends here.

Ex-County Commissioner Frye made a business trip to the county seat on Monday.

D. Harry Barnhart, Middleburg, accompanied by his family, was a visitor to our town on Sunday.

Miss Minnie Raymer is visiting friends at Middleburg this week.

Dr. W. P. Noble was called to Mifflintown last Saturday night to attend the funeral of his brother, J. M. Noble, who was killed Thursday of last week in a railroad accident near Blair's Mills, Juniata county.

The Dunkards held their semi-annual love-feast in the church north of town, on Wednesday and Thursday of last week. Large congregations were in attendance both days.

The drouth is very severe in this neighborhood. The streams are very low, some of the wells are dry and others nearly so. The farmers are retarded in both seeding and corn-husking, and should winter set in now, a serious time would result.

GREENWOOD.

The much needed rain came Sunday night and not only laid the dust but extinguished the forest fires as well.

Mr. Black killed a deer last week. Edward Weaver didn't kill any; he killed some deer last year and is a good hunter, but the way he goes at the business this season he is not going to make a corner in venison. Edward took the war path against the deer tribe last Saturday, in company with J. H. Barnes. The battle ground was Chinkapin Hill; the hunters divided their forces so as to surround the hill and were to rejoin each other at a given point. Barnes made the point but saw no game. Not so with Edward; the deer lay in wait for him to dispute his passage through their country. He came within twenty paces of the enemy before he saw them. Two deer blocked his path. He raised his gun and fired. The deer looked up in some little astonishment, and seeing only one hunter disdained to fly, but bravely stood their ground. Result at first round—nothing—no blood in sight. Edward seeing his shot made no impression on the deer family hastily drew his ramrod and began the laborious task of reloading that noisy but harmless shooting iron. The deer in the meantime stood their ground watching the performance and wondering to themselves what all this noisy business meant, and amused themselves by plucking tender bunches of herbage from time to time. But after a while the war gun was charged, the hunter raised it to his face and fired, result as before. The deer, tired of this noise and confusion in the midst of a peaceful repast, marched off in a dignified manner to quieter pastures leaving the perplexed hunter to find out what was the matter with his gun, which he is trying to do with the aid of a gunsmith. There is supposed to be an angle or curve in the barrel, and instead of shooting at the deer with that gun he should have shot around them. The last heard of the deer they were in the enjoyment of good health. Sportsmen who have been using their guns for fishing rods all summer had better have the angles or curves taken out before they go deer hunting.

Mr. and Mrs. James Miner, of Mount Union, returned home from Edgemont, where they had been engaged for the past month in helping to harvest the peach crop. Mr. Miner says the peach crop was the largest he ever saw.

Found Dead by the Roadside.

Major Isaac Wagoner, of Newton township, Cumberland county, was found lying dead by the roadside a mile and a-half west of Newville, Monday morning. He was taking a load of coal from Newville to his farm near Green Spring. When found he was lying with his face downward and his neck was broken. It is supposed he was attacked with vertigo or paralysis and this caused his fall. He was 75 years old, and apparently in good health until the accident.

Dynamite Caps in School.

Tuesday morning two girls, daughters of John Wilson, took several fulminating dynamite caps which they found, to Miss Martha Christian's colored school on German street, which they attended. They gave several caps to two other girls, Eva and Etta Knapper. While Eva Knapper and one of the Wilson girls were trying to force the caps on the ends of their pencils, the caps exploded, injuring not only the girls who had them but one or two others. None of the girls was seriously injured.

DEATH'S DOINGS.

Those Who Have Passed to the Great Beyond—The Death Record In Franklin County and Elsewhere.

Philip Goetz, Sen., a respected German citizen of Greencastle, died at his home Sunday evening, aged about 85 years. Besides being an exemplary gentleman, he was a consistent christian—a member of the Lutheran church. He is survived by two daughters and six sons, one of the latter, Leander, is a minister in one of the Lutheran churches in Williamsport, Pa.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wolff and Mrs. Hannah Rowe died in Waynesboro Thursday of last week. Both had reached advanced age and both were widows.

Three Safes Blown Open in Mercersburg.

On Monday night or early Tuesday morning three safes were blown open in Mercersburg by burglars. One was in C. F. Fendrick's warehouse, another in J. S. Whitmore & Co's., and the third in the railroak ticket office. Not over $10 or $12 was obtained and this was found in Whitmore's safe; there had been no cash left in the others. The front doors of Fendrick's and Whitmore's warehouses were pried open. The entrance to the railroad office was made through a window. Holes were bored in two of the safes and dynamite or some other explosive used to blow off the doors. The outer door of Fendrick's safe was open and it was an easy matter to open the inner door. The doors of the other two safes are, of course ruined, and will have to be replaced by new ones.

It is singular that no one seems to have heard the explosions, though the buildings in which they occurred are somewhat remote from the residence portions of the town.

There was, at last accounts, no clue to the perpetrators of the robbery, which though fortunately not great, has createe much excitement in Mercersburg.

Work of the Fire Fiend.

A fire in the oil regions around Nesmith, Cygert and Lucky, south of Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday and Sunday, destroyed oil derricks, tanks and other property to the value of upwards of $150,000.

The damage already done by the marsh fires in Southern Indiana is variously estimated at from $65,000 to $200,000. A family of three is reported to have been burned to death near Kontz on Sunday night.

Prairie fires in Porter and Jasper counties, Indiana, have damaged property to the extent of $50,000 within the past few days. On Sunday the flames crossed the Kankakee river at Sandy Hook, a distance of 100 feet.

A Laporte, Indiana, despatch says that the marsh fire now raging in Lake county and the western portion of Porter county threatens the destruction of the villages of La Crosse, Wilders and Hanna.

Forest fires are raging in the Blue Ridge, northeast of Lexington, Virginia. Thousands of acres have been burned over.

Jumped to His Death.

Patrick King Callahan, more familiarly known as "King" Callahan, the professional bridge jumper, leaped from Poughkeepsie bridge into the Hudson river, a distance of 212 feet, at an early hour Sunday morning, and died at 11.25 o'clock Monday night.

It was found impossible for Callahan to jump and clear the telegraph wires, so he lowered his body down to the iron girder, which is 212 feet from high-water mark, and made the leap from that point.

His body shot down toward the water at a rapid rate and presented a thrilling spectacle as he wavered to one side and then to the other. When about 20 feet from the water Callahan's body inclined and struck the water with terrific force.

He sank and came to the surface moaning like a dying man. In about 15 seconds his friends in a boat pulled him in and rowed to the shore. He got out of the boat without any assistance and walked to Dean's Hotel, which is near the railroad depot.

He went in and lay on the floor and was perfectly exhausted. His limbs grew stiff and he was carried to a room and put to bed. It was found that the peritoneum was so badly lacerated that he was rapidly growing weaker from the loss of blood. The hemorrhage continued until he died from exhaustion.

The Franklin Review.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1895.

A WORD IN PASSING.

Town and County Briefs With a Bit of Comment—Happenings of the Week and a Forecast of Coming Events.

The Pennsylvania railroad will no longer carry bicycles as baggage free. The minimum charge for each will be fifteen cents.

Harry Kelso has sold his farm between Strasburg and Roxbury to James Geyer, of Strasburg, for $2100. Possession will be given April next.

Frank Lininger, Antrim township, made over 1600 gallons of cider off his small farm this year and sold it at from 5 to 8 cents per gallon.

The rain shower of Sunday evening was very gratefully received. It settled the dust on the streets for a day or two and extinguished the mountain fires.

Martinsburg, West Va., is in danger of a water famine. The supply is now so low that if fire should break out there would be no adequate means of controlling it.

A correspondent of the Fulton Republican says, the people of Buck Valley have boiled enough apple butter to spread the township all over and they are still boiling.

David Maun near McConnellsburg has been running a hydraulic cider press this season. He hasn't made any water cider yet, the Republican says, as water is scarcer than cider.

During my absence from my practice all of my Records of Eye Cases will be in the hands of Dr. R. W. Ramsey, who will attend to my patients.

DR. GEO. S. HULL.

Tickets for the remaining entertainments of the Y. M. C. A. course are on sale at the usual places, the book stores and the Association rooms. The price for the remainder of the course is 85 cents.

The Waynesboro Village Record was sold Thursday of last week by Mrs. Blair and sons to I. P. Yost for $3400. It is a good newspaper property. We wish the new proprietor success with his purchase.

This—Thursday—evening is Hallow E'en. If the young people would learn how it was observed long ago they would not, perhaps, annoy people with any of the pranks that are usually played in its commemoration.

The rabbit season will open November 1 and will continue until January 1. Hunters who have been looking about the country say that rabbits are unusually plentiful this year and they are, therefore, looking for a successful season.

Wilson P. Magee, who occupies the Mrs. Elizabeth Dallas farm near Upper Strasburg, had a field of corn of 18 acres which yielded 1586 bushels of corn. He also had 747 bushels of wheat. He expects his entire corn crop to exceed 3000 bushels.

The danger of a water famine has passed in Waynesboro. A large pump and boiler were purchased by the Frick company and placed on the Martin Hoover farm on the Antietam creek from which stream water is being pumped into the reservoir.

Mrs. Hannah Bower, of Newville, aged 63 years, committed suicide by hanging herself in the garret of her home Wednesday afternoon. Mrs. Bower had brooded over the death of an only child, which occurred some time ago, that her mind became affected.

An exchange says: The story is going the rounds that water is selling in Altoona for $2 a barrel. The water that commands this big price is drawn from an artesian well, and the owner has a small mint. We should think he had, if it were true. It beats oil at $1.25 a barrel all to pieces.

Shippensburg has a building boom. The News says: Our carpenters and mechanics are being rushed with putting up new buildings and making repairs to old ones. There are a number of new houses to be erected this fall yet, so that they will have employment pretty much through the winter.

It will surprise many to learn that the buildings on the grounds of the Atlanta Exposition exceed in capacity those of the Philadelphia Centennial, and are three times as large as the New Orleans Exposition. There are eighteen large exhibition buildings, with three hundred others of various sizes.

While fighting fire in his house on Friday, Bert Miller, Waynesboro, had his hands and face severely burned. The silverware in the dining room was partially damaged by the heat. Much of the furniture was also injured by the heat, smoke and water. The loss will aggregate several hundred dollars.

The Cumberland Valley railroad—main line—was inspected Tuesday. The branches were gone over yesterday. Quite a number of officers of the road formed the inspecting party. The road was found in good condition. The party, 23 in number, took dinner at the Baldwin House in Hagerstown Tuesday.

A white deer was seen several days ago, it is said, in Allen's Valley, Fulton county, on the Game and Fish Club's lands. Another, not a white one but quite a large one, was seen in Path Valley Monday. This species of game seems to be plentiful this season. A number of deer have been shot on the South mountain and a few on the mountains west of us.

Dr. Z. T. Jones, Shade Gap, and J. Brodbeck, Orbisonia, last week brought from West Virginia 100 head of fine steers averaging 1100 pounds, which they will feed over winter. The cattle were brought by rail to Hancock and driven up through Fulton county. Dr. Jones had been trying to purchase cattle from local dealers here but was unable to secure the kind and quantity he wanted.

On Monday evening, October 28, Harry Seibert, formerly of Chambersburg, but now in Hartford, Conn., and Miss Emma Snider, daughter of the late J. N. Snider, were married in the parsonage of the First Lutheran church by Rev. E. H. Leisenring. Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties witnessed the ceremony. On the late train over the C. V. R. R., the happy couple left for their new home in Hartford.

One day last week while William Hunter and Thornton Foster, of Wells Valley, Fulton county, were out hunting, unknown to each other, Mr. Hunter mistook Foster's turkey call for the call of a turkey, and being unable to see Foster because of intervening bushes, he fired and nearly the entire load of shot penetrated parts of Foster's body. The young man is evidently seriously wounded but there are hopes of his recovery. Mr. Hunter regrets the mishap very much. Both are young men and friends of each other.

The Cumberland Valley Conference of the West Pennsylvania Synod of the Lutheran church will begin its fall meeting at West Fairview Monday. Dr. Mann, of Mercersburg, will preach the sermon. Among the matters before the conference will be "The Mourners' Bench System" and "Is Baptism Essential to Salvation?" The meeting will continue several days.

Ed. Gelwicks, who made sale here some days since and arranged to move his family to Pittsburg, whither he had gone himself to prepare for the family's reception, was burned out there on Monday night. His stock was all destroyed, but the loss was mostly covered by insurance. His wife and daughter are still here.

For the protection of the old soldiers, as we thought, the REVIEW published an item taken from The Fulton Republican in regard to the Easel Monument Association, to put old soldiers on their guard against being swindled. We learn since that the association is favorably mentioned by the National Tribune and by many old soldiers who have received the picture. The persons canvassing for the association and selling the picture are represented as gentlemen and such they seem to be. If we have been misled into doing them any injustice we regret it.

James W. Moore, one of the REVIEW'S Fannettsburg friends is now working for the Rife Tannery Co., Middletown, Pa., and expects to remain until spring when he will return to Fannettsburg and occupy the property he recently purchased of George Dunkle, an aged veteran, who has gone to live with his son, Hon. J. C. Dunkle, in Clearfield county. Mr. Moore says Middletown is a thriving place. The tannery and the large paper mill furnish employment for many hands. There is a good local market for all the produce the farmers of the surrounding country can supply.

There was an explosion of dynamite in a temporary shop on the Normal School grounds, Shippensburg, on Monday afternoon. Some of the explosive was in a box in the building when two workmen went in and blew the fire in a blacksmith's forge. Some sparks from the fire were carried to the box and first exploded a cap. The men knowing what would likely follow, ran out of the building, and none too soon, for in a moment there was another explosion which wrecked the building and would have killed the men had they been in it. Happily they escaped without injury.

The audience room of the new Reformed church at Williamson is to be completed in its appointments and furnishings. There will then be ample and comfortable seating capacity for large audiences. The edifice is a very sightly one and its location the best that could be selected in that section of country. The members of the congregation have worked together harmoniously and indefatigably and are doing so still, with their pastor, Rev. Herman Bassler, to make improvements to the church as they were able, and they are to be congratulated upon the approaching completion of their work.

District Deputy Gordon on Saturday evening completed his tour of installing the officers of the various Odd Fellows lodges in the county. Saturday evening he installed the following officers of Scotland Lodge No. 831: N. G., W. E. Bitner; V. G., A. J. Kreitzer; Asst. Sec., G. F. Murray; Treasurer, Adam Kreitzer; R. S. to N. G., H. W. Ott; Warden, J. P. Youst; O. G., Wm. Pentz; Chaplain, A. H. Etter. The other subordinate appointments were made but as the appointees were not present they could not be installed The secretary is W. A. Pentz; Representative, G. F. Murray. The sitting Past Grand is J. A. Monn.

Miss Mary Coic, Judge Buckley's housekeeper at Fort Littleton, Fulton county, understands gardening in all its various departments. She also understands the Judge's weakness for pumpkin pie. To gratify this harmless hankering she cultivates this quality of "fruit" and was more than usually successful this year. She has quite a number of large pumpkins, the largest of which weighed 117¼, the next 90½, the third 48 pounds, when cut from the vine. As H. W. Karper, traveling-man of this place, has a weakness in the same direction she sent the 48-pounder home with him. So if the doctor calls at Mr. Karper's soon we will know what the trouble is.

Living Chess.

A picturesque game of living chess was lately played at Prague representing a famous battle fought between the Hungarians and Bohemians many centuries ago. The costumes were splendid, the Hungarians being black and the Bohemians white. The kings and queens were surrounded by a grand suite, the knights and bishops rode gaily caparisoned horses drawn by pages, the castles were war chariots flying the respective colors and drawn by four horses apiece and the pawns represented lancers. Altogether over 250 persons enacted the game, which took place in the grounds of the Ethnographical Exhibition.

A Frightful Railroad Wreck.

Last Thursday morning about 2.30 o'clock one of the ugliest wrecks ever seen on the P. R. R., occurred near Newport, about eighteen miles west of Harrisburg. A train of mail cars going west was passing a freight going east, both trains moving rapidly, when one of the freight cars jumped the track and struck the other train throwing the locomotive and four mail cars down over an embankment into the canal. The engineer and fireman were instantly killed and many of the mail clerks injured, some of them fatally. Eleven mail cars, all containing mail matter, were burned. The loss to the railroad company is greater than that of any other wreck for years. It was unavoidable, however.

Her Seventy-Ninth Birthday.

Wednesday of last week the children of Mrs. Martha Croft, widow of the late John Croft, Sr., celebrated her 79th birthday, at her home in St. Thomas. All were present except one daughter, Mrs. Cell, who resides in Kansas, namely: David, Daniel, John, George, Samuel and Mrs. Lottie Clark. The daughters-in-law and son-in-law, Mr. Clark, were there, also a number of grandchildren, besides other friends of the venerable lady. An excellent dinner was enjoyed and a very pleasant time was spent socially. Notwithstanding her great age Mrs. Croft is as sprightly, intelligent and nimble footed as many persons not half her age. She is an estimable christian lady of kindly disposition, is widely known and sincerely loved. Her many friends wish her many happy returns of her birthday.

PERSONAL PARAGRAPHS.

Items of Interest About Your and Our Friends and Those Whom We All Know.

C. A. Martin, St. Thomas, dropped in on Friday. He never stops long but his visits always mean something.

Dr. Maclay and William Clark returned from their southern trip Tuesday evening. They enjoyed their journey very much.

Mrs. John E. Jones, the mother of Mrs. Robert G. Jones and Deputy Sheriff Jones, is lying painfully ill at her home near Metal.

John Woodall and H. L. Byers, of St. Thomas, were in on Saturday. John stopped long enough to tell several amusing war experiences.

Jacob C. Snyder and James Haiston, two of Fort Loudon's veterans, stopped in while in town on business, Thursday They both have kind words for the REVIEW.

Among the pleasant callers at the REVIEW office Friday were Dr. Lantz and Rev. E. L. Hughes, of Lehmasters, both of whom are appreciative readers of the REVIEW.

Wilson P. Magee, Upper Strasburg, was a pleasant caller at the REVIEW office Friday. He brought his aunt, Mrs. Ellen Bare, of Shade Gap, Huntingdon county, to town to have her eyes treated.

Postmaster D. T. Ritter, of Sunbeam, paid the REVIEW office a hurried business call Tuesday morning. Mr. Ritter has more than once placed us under obligations for substantial evidences of his friendship.

S. W. Kirk, of the Law Department, Dickinson College, was called home to Fulton county Friday on account of the dangerous illness of his mother. Mr. Kirk took time to call at the REVIEW office while waiting for his train.

Jno. A. Harry and W. F. Kolb, Dry Run, both patrons of the REVIEW, were in Chambersburg over Friday night. Their friendly call and substantial encouragement were quite cheering. John A. Elder, Esq., and John Brinley, of the same place, were also business visitors to town at the same time.

Samuel Diffenderfer, of St. Thomas, was in town Thursday for the first time in several months. He has almost recovered from a severe illness that confined him to the house many weeks. Mr. Diffenderfer has passed the alloted age of three-score years and ten but is still quite bright and cheery.

'Squire W. H. Peck, of Gem, and W. H. Hess, of Dickey's Mountain, Fulton county, were business visitors in Chambersburg over Monday night. 'Squire Peck was purchasing goods from our wholesale dealers; he will engage in the mercantile business. Mr. Hess is also in the mercantile and milling business.

Dr. J. F. Barton, Vice Principal of the State Normal, Shippensburg, paid his respects to the REVIEW Saturday. He was detained in the west several weeks longer than he expected to remain, by the illness of his mother and sister, which followed the death of his father. He says the REVIEW is one of the local papers that are quite popular in the Normal reading room.

W. R. Noble, of Metal township, was a brief caller at the office Tuesday. Mr. Noble is one of a number of reliable people in the township who say our criticism of the mountain road between Path Valley and Horse Valley was just. Mr. Noble says, also, that the road between Fannettsburg and Richmond is in bad condition. The problem of good roads and how to maintain them would be profitable matter for discussion at a local farmers' institute that should be held in Path Valley. By the way, a farmers' institute in that valley where crops never fail and farmers prosper, would be a good thing at which other matters besides roads could be discussed with profit.

Grand Chrysanthemum Show.

The ladies of the Methodist Espiscopal church have completed arrangements for their great chrysanthemum show to be held on the 15th, 16th and 18th of November, in the room formerly occupied by the G. A. R., corner of Main and Queen streets. They have secured the co-operation of Mr. Henry Eicholtz, the celebrated florist of Waynesboro, who has large experience in the care of chrysanthemums and has made their culture a study. He promises a brilliant display, some of his plants resembling young trees and bearing fifty or more flowers. The people of our town and vicinity may look forward to a rare show, and one which will arouse enthusiasm among lovers of flowers. The plants will all be for sale, to be removed only at the close of the show. Cut flowers in abundance may also be bought. The prizes offered by the society will be paid in gold. They are as follows:

$5 for largest and best collection of chrysanthemums.
$3 for best half dozen of various colors.
$2.50 for best collection of pink.
$2.50 for best collection of yellow.
$2.50 for best collection of white.
$1 for finest single flower.

Reformed Church Synod of the Potomac.

The Reformed Church Synod of the Potomac met in Frederick City, Md., on Thursday last and continued its sessions until the middle of the present week. Besides the ministers present from Chambersburg, Hon. W. Rush Gillan and George A. Wood, were among the laymen in attendance. We have not the space to give the proceedings in detail; it must suffice to say that the sessions were all busy one, much formal business being transacted.

The report of Mercersburg College shows the institution to be in a flourishing condition and is progressing as it has not done for years in the character of its work and in the number of students enrolled. The same is to be said of Franklin and Marshall at Lancaster, the attendance having more than doubled in the last six years. Over fifty new students were enrolled at the beginning of the present school year in September.

The work of the Women's College in Frederick received specia. commendation by resolution of the Synod

Dr. W. C. Schaeffer of Chambersburg, was chosen President for the current year. On Sunday the pulpits in the city were occupied by members of the Synod.

On Tuesday morning Hon. W. Rush Gillan addressed the Synod after which resolutions on Mercersburg College were adopted. Mr. Gillan is President of the Board of Regents of the college. It is the purpose of these officers to secure $9000 to pay for a new building for the students. Of this sum the people of Mercersburg have subscribed $3000. After other routine business the Synod adjourned to meet next year in Altoona.

KILLED ON THE NEW RAILROAD.

Fireman Scalded and Engineer Crushed to Death.

On Thursday afternoon of last week Jerome M. Noble, fireman, was killed and George Pennebacker, engineer, was fatally injured, between Waterford and Waterloo, on the Tuscarora Valley railroad in Juniata county. There is no turn-table at Blair's Mills the terminus of the road, so the engine is turned at Waterford and from there to Blair's Mills it runs backward. While running between Waterford and Waterloo, near Mr. Moorehead's farm, the tender jumped the track and after going a short distance ran against a stump, throwing the engine to the opposite side of the track. The engineer reversed his engine but it was too late. The ground being sideling, the engine was thrown upon its side with Engineer Pennebacker under it. Firemen Noble was so badly scalded that he died in a few moments. Though pinned under the engine and suffering mortal agony, Pennebacker gave directions to those who had assembled, how to jack up the engine to release him. He lived some hours after he was released. He was about 35 years old and leaves a wife. He lived at Waterford.

Mr. Noble was a half-brother of Dr. W. P. Noble of Upton, and a cousin of the Dyson brothers in Chambersburg. He was an estimable man and a consistent christian. His age was between 35 and 40 years. Mr. Noble was unmarried but was to have been married soon.

Both men resided at Waterford. Mr. Noble formerly resided at Concord and had been railroading only a few weeks.

The accident was a sad one, indeed, and created quite a sensation in the community in which it occurred, and is regretted by none more than by Mr. Moorhead, the projector of the road.

Several theories have been advanced as to the cause of the wreck. Some malicious persons have placed obstructions on the track on several occasions. President Moorhead found several ties standing in a cattle guard and the section hands have removed stones from the track several times. It is thought by some that this was the cause of the wreck as it happened in a strip of woods and near a curve in the road. Mr. Pennebacker was buried at McCullough's Mills Saturday, and Mr. Noble was laid to rest in Mifflintown Sunday.

A Disastrous Fire in Lurgan.

On Saturday night the barn on the farm of 'Squire D. D. Swanger at Lurgan, Lurgan township, was totally destroyed by fire, together with all its contents, including the crops of wheat, rye, oats, corn and cloverseed, and a number of farming utensils, also a large stack of fodder and tons of straw. The new wagon shed, hogpen, corncrib and buggy shed were also destroyed. There were twelve head of hogs in the pen and these were burned to death. The sheep in the barn were forgotten in the excitement for a time, and when liberated their fleeces were burning. All were saved, however. The farm was tenanted by the 'Squire's son, Bruce Swanger, who suffers with his father in the loss. The fire is supposed to have originated from Murray Powell's engine with which he had been hulling cloverseed. The huller which was a good one was also burned.

There was some insurance in the Lurgan Mutual, but the loss was not nearly covered. The fire could be seen from a long distance, as the barn was on comparatively high ground. Before it died away several hundred people had assembled. It was the largest fire, and the destruction of property was the greatest ever known in that section.

'Squire Swanger's many friends will sympathize with him in his loss. Though it is a terrible blow he is not the man to sit down and pine over his loss, but he will go to work with his well-known energy and repair it as rapidly as possible.

The Soldiers' Orphans.

There was a business meeting of the Soldiers' Orphans' Industrial commission at the Scotland Industrial school on Tuesday. Captain Skinner came from Pittsburg to attend the meeting. The Orphan Schools Commission report the attendance at the various schools October 1, as follows: Chester Springs, 313; Harford, 190; Uniontown, 315; Scotland, 213. It is said that there have been a number of admissions to the Scotland school since the first of the present month and that there are now nearly or quite 300 pupils in the institution.

Horseless Carriages.

Two road vehicles whose motive power is electricity, have been built by the Crawford Manufacturing Company at Hagerstown for two gentlemen in Philadelphia, Messrs. Morris and Salom, engineers and inventors. They invented the machines that were made for them respectively. The vehicles are noiseless and without that tremor that other carriages have when in motion. Friction is reduced to the minimum by ball-bearings There are three attachments, one is a knob, the turning of which regulates the speed; a crank steers the machine and the brake is operated by the foot. These three control and guide the machine, so it is more easily driven than a horse is and with greater safety. The power is derived from storage batteries, there being two motors to each wagon, and each is of three-fourth horse power. The cost of power per mile is two cents. The speed is fifteen miles per hour. The cost or durability of the machines is not mentioned, but they, with the electrical apparatus, must be somewhat expensive.

Judge Stewart on "The Reformation."

The congregation of the First Lutheran church had a delightful treat on Sunday morning. Rev. E. H. Leisenring, the pastor, had invited Hon. John Stewart to address the congregation on the Reformation. Judge Stewart consented with the understanding that no announcement be made of the address. If announcement had been made the church would not have furnished seating or even standing room for all who would have gone to hear him. It is useless to attempt to give even an abstract of the address. Suffice it to say that Judge Stewart has been a close and observant reader of history and of what might be called ecclesiastical history especially and he not only held the attention of, but charmed all who heard him. Many persons in town will recall the gratification with which they heard him in the same church about a year ago on "Luther Day," his subject then was Martin Luther.

If Judge Stewart would consent to deliver a public lecture on Martin Luther on the Reformation, before a general audience, the largest audience room in town would not contain all who would be glad to him. He should be invited to deliver such a lecture.

HOLMES BEFORE A JURY.

The Many-Times Murderer on Trial For His Life.—He Showes No Emotion But is Nervous.

H. H. Holmes who is charged with a score of murders was placed on trial in Philadelphia, Monday, for the murder of Benjamin F. Pitezel. He will also be tried, upon the conclusion of the present case, for the murder of Pitezel's three children—two daughters and a son. The array of witnesses is strong and the testimony, or much of it, at least, is very damaging. When brought into the court room the prisoner was pale and wan and quite nervous.

A sensation was created when Holmes' counsel, Lawyers Shoemaker and Rotan asked leave to withdraw from the case. This privilege being denied them by the court Holmes promptly discharged them, and when the court refused to grant a continuance till next day, Holmes declared his intention of trying the case himself. After the twelve jurors had been drawn court adjourned for the day.

The second day of the trial of Holmes, alleged archfiend, murderer of 22 persons, opened with the echo of District Attorney Graham's speech ringing in the ears of those who heard it Tuesday morning. He needed but to recite the facts as they were supposed to exist, and that he did, plainly and patiently, without any attempt at effect, following step by step the awful work accredited to the defendant.

And it was a recital as had never been heard in a court of justice, something almost too horrible for belief—first, the murder of Pitezel, father; next, the slaughter of the infant son and the burning of the butchered body to destroy evidence of the second crime; third, the taking of the 14-year-old daughter of Pitezel to a house, after she had unconsciously aided Holmes in his awful work by identifying the remains of her father, and outraging the child, then killing her and her younger sister and burying their bodies in quicklime, and, lastly, the effort to make away with the mother and her only remaining child, an infant, by trying to get her to carry a large quantity of dynamite.

And when a visible shudder of horror ran through those who listened breathlessly in the court room Holmes almost sneered in the face of the man who told it. He was the least affected of all in that crowded court room. It was not an exhibition of nerve; he clearly didn't realize the position he was in. The plain truth is he is deficient in just that sense—of realization. And that was his work with but one family, all done that he might get control of a sum of money amounting to a little less than $10,000.

Jeanette Pitezel, the fifteen-year-old daughter of the murdered man, was the first witness. Her only testimony was the reidentification of a large crayon portrait of Pitezel as that of her father. Eugene Smith, the man who discovered Pitezel's body in the Callowhill street house, was next called and described the finding of the body on the second floor of the building. Smith is a carpenter and made Pitezel's acquaintance through the latter's pretense that he was a dealer in models and patterns. He explained that he called to see Pitezel and the latter not being on the first floor he went up stairs and was horrified to see the dead body. He at once called in the police. He identified Holmes as the man he once saw at Pitezel's house, on Callowhill street.

He also saw Holmes at the time of the exhumation of the body of Pitezel. Smith said that at that time Holmes offered $30 to have the body cremated. The District Attorney then turned the witnesses over to Holmes for cross-examination. Holmes' line of examination of Smith was directed towards showing that the latter could not have seen him (Holmes) enter the house and pass up the stairs; as he had testified, from the place were he (Smith) said he was sitting. Holmes admitted that he was at the house, but his evident object was to discredit Smith with the jury and to lead them to think that Smith was confusing matters of his own knowledge with that which he had heard others say.

Holmes asked Smith many questions and consumed much time, without eliciting anything of note or in any way altering Smith's testimony. The cross-examination lasted an hour. Upon the request of Holmes, all the witnesses except the one testifying, who were present at the finding of the body, were excluded from the court room. Dr. William J. Scott testified to having been called to the house when the body was found.

When the prisoner began his cross-examination of Dr. Scott, he found himself at home. For nearly two hours the prisoner and the witness debated the probabilities of the case and discussed the various properties of chloroform and the effects of this drug administered under different conditions. Holmes showed considerable knowledge of chemistry and the results obtained from drugs under different applications.

But Dr. Scott met every supposition with strong, decisive statements that bore out his direct evidence on the case. Holmes cross-examined Dr. Mattern, the coroner's physician, who made the post-mortem examination of Pitezel's body, more than an hour, endeavoring to find a weak spot in his testimony. The members of the jury looked on astounded, and it was a noticeable fact that after that the Court addressed Holmes as "Doctor."

Both Dr. Mattern and Dr. Scott testified that Pitezel's death was due to chloroform poisoning. They said that chloroform was found in large quantity in the dead man's stomach, and they gave it as their opinion that it had been injected into the stomach after death. Dr. Leffmann also gave this opinion. But the prosecution did not show how death resulted from a chloroform poisoning if the drug was injected into the stomach after the man was dead.

Although the questioning of Holmes was persistent and showed much tact and shrewdness, it seemed to be largely irrelevant; and not to the point at issue. Toward the last it looked as if the prisoner were floundering in a sea of medical terms and chemical hypotheses. Just before the evening recess he seemed to realize more than he had before the enormity of the task that he had undertaken—the defence of himself in his trial for life.

When "Dessie" Pitezel was on the stand he displayed no emotion, but questioned her regarding her father without a tremor. He looked upon the picture of the man he is charged with having murdered without a change of countenance. When the portrait was handed to him he remarked: "That is a good likeness."

But when District Attorney Graham produced the portrait of Alice Pitezel and proceeded to bring out the evidence in his possession regarding the relations of Holmes with the girl at the house 1905 North Eleventh street, it could easily be seen that the prisoner was on nettles, for his lip quivered and his face wore an anxious look. When it was decided not to offer this evidence he heaved a sigh of relief, and called Mr. Rotan over to the dock to learn the result of the conference at side bar.

In accordance with the prisoner's request, he was given an opportunity to converse with Miss Yoke, his third living wife, before he was taken into court in the morning. The meeting took place in the District Attorney's office. Miss Yoke was accompanied by her mother. She looked pale and thin, and traces of the awful strain under which she is laboring were plainly visible.

The interview was short. Miss Yoke, to whom Holmes had transferred the Chicago property known as "The Castle," said that she was willing to sign any papers that he might desire, returning to him anything and everything that he had placed in her name. She was anxious to do that, she said, and wind up her connection with him. She told him, further, that she held aloof from him of her own volition, and was not influenced in the least by the District Attorney or any of the officers of the Commonwealth.

The skull of Pitezel was brought into court in a neat, wooden box, but the District Attorney changed his mind about offering it at that time as a means of identification, and it was not exhibited. It will be brought out again later on. Another gruesome exhibit was the mole which Holmes and Dr. Mattern cut from Pitezel's neck, but this was kept wrapped in paper and was not shown, although frequent reference was made to it.

At the opening of the night session of Tuesday, Holmes recalled his counsel, Messrs. Rotan and Shoemaker, whom he had discharged on Monday.

Franklin County Farmers' Institute.

The annual Farmers' Institute of Franklin county will be held in the town hall at Greencastle, November 4 and 5, Monday and Tuesday of next week. The first session will open Monday at 10 a. m. The following program has been announced: Prayer; music; opening address by Geo. H. Cook; "How to Build up a Successful Dairy," illustrated, Hon. Geo. T. Powell, Ghent, N. Y.; "Care of Farm Horses," Senator Critchfield, of Somerset county; Queries and Answers.

Afternoon session: Music; "Transportation and the Farmer," Hon. John Hamilton, Deputy Secretary of Agriculture; "Pure Food Laws of Pennsylvania, and the Oleomargarine Question," Hon. Levi Wells, Dairy and Food Commissioner; Queries and Answers; "How to raise and Feed Cornfodder, Dr. H. P. Armsby, Pennsylvania State College; General Discussion.

Evening session, 7 o'clock: Music; Lectures: "Need of Agricultural Education in our Public Schools," Hon. George T. Powell; "The Road Question," Hon. John Hamilton; Discussion of Road Question.

Tuesday morning session: Music; "Cattle Feeding," Senator Critchfield; "Gardening for Family and Market," Hon. George T. Powell; Dr. H. P. Armsby will occupy the next period, subject not announced; General Discussion.

Tuesday afternoon: Music; "Taxation," Hon. John Hamilton; "Insect and Fungus Blights in Fruit Trees," Hon. George T. Powell; Essay, subject not announced, Dr. John P. Stover, V. S.; General Discussion.

Tuesday evening session: Music; address, Governor Hastings; "The Object of Education," Hon. John Hamilton.

The music, vocal and instrumental, will form a pleasing feature of the institute. Miss Grace Bishop will preside at the organ; Miss Lizzie Snively will sing several solos and will have charge of the selection of the other vocal numbers.

Notwithstanding the fact that Tuesday is election day it is believed that the attendance will be large at all the sessions. The gentlemen having these institutes in charge are among the most progressive and intelligent farmers in the county and have contributed largely toward making these institutes the most valuable agricultural meetings that the county has ever had.

Fell From a Balloon.

Craig, one of the Aeronauts who exhibited at Waynesboro some days since was badly hurt at Hancock, Md., on Saturday. The Herald and Torch Light thus tells of the mishap:

"E. E. Craig, an aeronaut, of Sturgis, Michigan, gave a balloon ascension at Hancock, Saturday afternoon, for a purse raised by the business men of the town. The big balloon was inflated in the Bowles lot, near the canal bridge. While ascending, Craig gave a daring performance on a trapeze. After reaching a height of about 800 feet he cut loose. The parachute refused to open, shooting downward like an arrow during the first hundred feet. At length it opened, but its velocity could not be checked and the unfortunate aeronaut landed with great force on the roof of a stable in the rear of St. Peter's Catholic church, which stands on the high hill back of Hancock.

His right arm was badly cut near the elbow by coming in contact with the point of a lightning rod, and it is thought will be useless for life if he survives the injuries received in falling from the stable to the ground. His tongue was badly cut, his body bruised and it is supposed that internal injuries were sustained.

The unfortunate man is lying in an unconscious state at the residence of George Penrose in Hancock. He is being cared for by H. L. Williams, a brother aeronaut, also of Sturgis, Mich., who travels with him.

Last Thursday, Craig attempted an ascension from R. E. Taney's lot but fell heavily to the ground after attaining a height of six feet, the parachute having broken loose. He landed the full length of his body and remained unconscious for quite a period. Dr. P. E. Stigers administered restoratives. A large crowd of people was attracted to Hancock by the ascensions.

Craig weighs nearly 200 pounds. He has made 150 ascensions and has met with only four accidents. The injured man has a family.

An Enjoyable Evening.

The Knights of Malta, King Richard Commandery No. 147, banqueted at the Montgomery House Monday evening. Music was furnished by the junior mandolin club. George B. Myers was toastmaster. Among those who responded were John W. Hoke, Esq., Geo. W. Brown, Hon. A. Nevin Pomeroy, Irvin C. Elder, Esq., Prof. Samuel Gelwix and Rev. E. H. Leisenring.

After giving a rising vote of congratulations to Harry C. Seibert, a charter member, upon his happy marriage, the pleasant company separated after a delightful evening.

CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Lesson For Sunday, November 3.

International Sunday school lesson for Sunday, November 3, from I Samuel 7: 5-15. Title: Samuel the Judge. Golden text: "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." The events in Hebrew history, between this lesson and the last, are so important, so full of lessons urging faithfulness and obedience to God that they should be carefully read and considered.

There had been trouble in Israel from the time the child Samuel received the message from God and delivered it to Eli, the aged priest. In one battle after another the Philistines are successful. Hophni and Phineas the two priestly sons of Eli are slain, and when the Hebrews send to Shiloh for the ark of the covenant, after the disastrous battle of Aphek, that is taken from them by the victors and is kept by them seven months. For more than twenty years the Hebrews are subject to the Philistines and during these twenty years Samuel has been really the head of his people through his prothetic influence which has constantly increased.

During the time the ark was in the possession of the Philistines it was a constant plague to them. Discovering this they eventually returned it, as it was to them a dangerous treasure. After being moved from place to place it was finally carried to Gibeah where Eleazar the son of Abinadab was appointed to take care of it.

At the time of our lesson the Israelites had become in a degree penitent for their sinfulness which included idolatry and other forms of evil doing. Samuel understanding the spirit of the people felt that the time had arrived for them to make an effort for their freedom, as he believed that they would now be faithful to the God of their fathers, for a time at least, so he commanded to gather all Israel to Mizpeh the loftiest mountain peak in all Palestine, not far from where the city of Jerusalem was afterward built. This gathering was a religious one, its purpose was a re-consecration to God, after a sincere repentance of the sins that had brought upon the people all their miseries not the least of which was their subjugation by and comparative servitude under the Philistines. Having thus repented and re-avowed their fidelity to God the people were ready with divine help which was given them to make successful battle against their idolatrous masters. It was not necessary for them to attack their enemies. When the Philistines learned of the great gathering of the Hebrews they marched out against them. It is probable that the courage of the Hebrews was not even then strong enough to meet their enemies in decisive combat, so the Lord came to their help, after the people had appealed to Samuel to cry unto the Lord in their behalf. The prophet took a lamb and offered it as a "burnt offering wholly unto the Lord;" then he "cried unto the Lord for Israel, and the Lord heard him." While the sacrifice was being offered the Philistines approached; but then the Lord "thundered with a great thunder upon the Philistines, and discomfited them, and they were smitten before Israel." Then, seeing who their helper was the Hebrews took courage and pursued their retreating enemies and utterly defeated them and subdued them. All the cities that had been taken from the Hebrews were restored to them, and there was peace throughout the land during the life of Samuel until after Saul had ruled for years as king. From the time of the great battle of Mizpeh until his death Samuel ruled Israel as judge. It might be stated here that he was Israel's last judge, for the people during his incumbency had begun to desire a king to succeed him and they became so importunate in his old age that, directed by God, he anointed Saul to rule over them.

In this lesson we find the reason for the line.

"Here I'll raise my Ebenezer," which is so often sung in one of the old hymns used in many churches. Truly it was a time of thanksgiving. With God's help temptations and other difficulties from within or without can be overcome.

In his "Teaching Hints" in The Sunday School Times, Dr. Schauffler says on this point of the lesson:

Let the young believer then take courage, and be not at all downhearted. Let him imitate the example of Israel in this respect also, and call mightily on God for deliverance. God will not desert him in the hour of need, any more than he deserted his chosen people. But let him not stop here. In all this battle of the soul there is the divine side, but there is also the human side. Put on your armor, and stand. Let every effort be enlisted in this fight, for on it depends your spiritual liberty. Do what Nehemiah did, namely, watch, pray, and set a guard because of the enemy. "Be strong, and quit yourselves like men," and you need not fear what the Adversary can do to you. God and you are stronger than Satan and all his hosts. The result will be what it was on that day when the Lord thundered and Israel fought; namely, victory.

Finally, remember to follow the example of the chosen people in the matter of thanksgiving. They repented, they prayed, they fought, they won, they gave thanks. But very often we pray for deliverance, and receive it, and then forget to say to God "Thank you." Ask yourself how it would appear if you were to write down all your petitions on a sheet of paper, and on another all your thanksgivings. Which would require the most room? I much fear that for the most of us our prayers would take ten times as much space as our words of gratitude. Prayer is much more frequent with us than praise.

This is wholly wrong. Read the Psalms, and see how much praise there is in them, as compared with prayer. Forty-seven of them begin with praise, not to speak of those which are full of it from beginning to end. The Apostle Paul, speaking of prayer, says, "In every thing by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God" (Phil. 4: 6). If in this way the believer meets the assaults of his arch-enemy, he will have the story of Israel repeated in his own life, and will be freed from the bondage of the Philistine just so long as he keeps to the Lord his God.

WOMAN'S HOUR.

SOMETHING TO INTEREST OUR MOTHERS, WIVES AND SWEETHEARTS.

Household Hints—A Bit of Fashion—Humor and Other Items of Note For The Fair Sex.

"Whys" for women and by women: A young man who has always been much interested in woman, says the Chicago Record, would like an answer to the following questions:

Why a woman doesn't keep her shoes blacked?

Why she doesn't wear her hair in the way that is most becoming to her, instead of spoiling her head by an unbecoming arrangement, because it is "stylish?"

Why she allows a man to smoke when on the street with her?

Why she permits such an abomination as a cuspidor to come into her house?

Why she doesn't stop talking about her servant girl?

Ditto about her clothes?

Why she doesn't wear hats that can't be spoiled by a damp day?

Why she ever chews gum?

Why she doesn't renounce the words "cute," "nice" and "perfectly grand" when talking of a sunset or a beefsteak?

Why she persists in filing her nails to a sharp point?

Why she sits on one foot when she wants to be "comfortable?"

Why her card clubs always end in a big row?

And a woman would like to know about the lord of creation:

Why he smokes cigarettes after all that is admitted on that subject?

Why he doesn't wear the neckties his wife buys for him?

Why he is profane on the street where women are passing, and when there's no occasion for it?

Why he eats bakery pie and doughnuts and then wonders that he has indigestion?

Why he thinks it's bright and cynical to sneer at women and women's work?

Why he insults his stomach by taking mixtures over the bar?

Why he can't lie on a couch without getting the pillow into hard knots under his head, thus nearly dislocating his neck?

Why he groans so when he has a little pain?

Why he thinks he is going to die if he has ever so slight a cold?

When we make up our minds to face a difficulty enthusiasm often carries us away, and when time for action arrives it is past. Therefore, it is not improbable that the young woman who has expressed her willingness to take the place of cook will feel dismayed when she realizes her ignorance and her responsibilities. She may know how to make pastry, but her idea on such questions as roasts and vegetables are hazy, to say the least, but she can soon learn. There are many to whom this kitchen work seems degrading and menial, but when we consider how much thought and ability are required to perform it well, we may reasonably conclude that an educated woman is no more out of her sphere in the kitchen than in the drawing room. The plain question is, "Shall we put our hands bravely to the broom and basting spoon, or shall we continue to prostrate ourselves before the juggernaut of custom? Should we sacrifice conventionality or ourselves?

Mrs. Oliver Bell Bunce writes in the Chicago Record: If there is one article in which colored cooks excel it is the hot bread—those toothsome flour dainties that are so appetizing, those brown and crusty pop-overs and steaming Sally Lunns. At 5 o'clock, the Virginia supper hour, they are, indeed, the piece de resistance of the early evening meal.

By the Queen's wish, the room in the Kensington Palace where her Majesty was born, and which was closed for years, has been specially done up this year, so as to present the exact appearance which it had in 1819. It is understood that her Majesty will in the future allow the room to be visited by special friends of the court. The gold and brass work of the room, although much worn, is still in a fair state of preservation.

The Princess of Wales was persuaded, at the time when "Books of Confession" lay upon every other drawing room table in the county of Norfolk, to give her mental photograph. And she confessed her favorite dish was "Yorkshire pudding," her favorite art "millinery" and her favorite occupation "minding my own business." The Princess in that last confession unconsciously summed up her whole character.

A Premonition of Death.

Hon. George A. Smith's Rogersville, Tenn., Review, tells of a well authenticated case of premonition of death. The case is that of Mrs. G. W. Arnold of Stony Point, Hawkins county. The lady had been afflicted with asthma for some years but was not a constant or severe sufferer.

On Tuesday of last week, says the Review, she became strangely impressed with the belief that she would die on the following day, and sent out invitations to her neighbors and friends to pay her a last visit. After giving directions concerning her burial, she bathed and dressed, and also arranged her husband's clothes which he was to wear at the funeral. She then bade her friends a final farewell before they left. Wednesday morning, after giving instructions for the preparation of breakfast, she took her seat in an easy chair, and soon afterwards threw up her hands; uttered an exclamation of pain and was dead.

Lions and Bicycle.

It was an odd and startling adventure that befell the Rev. R. P. Ashe, a missionary in Africa, while touring on a bicycle.

He had got far in advance of his porters, and was spinning along at a pretty good speed, with his eye on the path, when suddenly he heard a noise as of animals galloping beside him. True enough, on glancing to the right he discovered three magnificent lions keeping him company.

They were 20 or 30 yards to one side, and kept along with him for perhaps 100 yards. Then they stopped, looked at him for a moment—a strange being he must have looked in their eyes—and bounded away at right angles, still stopping now and then to look back, till they disappeared in the long grass.—Youth's Companion.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES

Clipped and Condensed From Our Exchanges.

Josiah Blecker, Boonsboro, had his well cleaned out last week, when a large cannon ball, which is supposed to have rolled in during the battle of South Mountain, was found at the bottom.

Within 72 hours, recently, 300 suspicious characters were arrested by the police in the west and south divisions of Chicago. Among them are idlers, vagrants, thieves and exconvicts. It is desired to put an end to the influx of bad characters into Chicago this winter.

The receipts of internal revenue for the three months of the current fiscal year amount to $37,744,478, a decrease as compared with the corresponding months of last year of $20,300,630. The receipts for September, 1895, were $5,882,251 greater than for September, 1894.

During a speech in Lexington, Kentucky, General Hardin, Democratic candidate for Governor, said: "If I am defeated and the balance of the ticket is elected the Democratic party is disintegrated. If I am elected and the balance of the ticket defeated the party is disintegrated."

There is trouble over the school question in Perry, Oklahoma. The colored citizens, ten days ago, obtained a mandamus compelling the Board to admit all children to the city schools, but, under the authority of the local board, Superintendent Augustine ordered the colored children from the white schools to their own buildings.

The National Association of Implement Manufacturers, in session in Chicago, last week decided to begin a vigorous campaign against Midway exhibitions at county fairs. A resolution adopted set forth that windmills, threshing machines and vehicles stood no chances whatever by the side of such attractions. The movement is certainly an excellent one.

The only man in the world perhaps that ever drove a horse wearing shoes made from metal which but a few weeks before had been on the moon, is Frank Morris of Worthington, W. Va. A few years ago a small aerolite composed of pure iron fell near Mr. Morris's homestead. He obtained possession of it and had a portion of it made into shoes for his favorite horse. These moonstones are usually highly prized and seldom used for such base purposes.

Wednesday of last week was "President's Day" at the Atlanta Exposition. The program included a military review and parade and a short address by Mr. Cleveland. Then followed a reception by the President and a tour of the Exposition buildings. There were present at the exercises: Secretaries Carlisle, Lamont, Herbert, Smith and Morton, Postmaster General Wilson, Vice President Stevenson and Governor Atkinson, of Georgia. In the parade were Governors O'Ferrall, Virginia, and Coffin, of Connecticut.

Howard Crosby, President of the New York Social Reform Club, says he has lost all faith in diminishing intoxication by law. He believes that persuasion, example and public opinion are the only effective weapons against liquor. He says: "As to the money spent in saloons, I do not think it is responsible for much of the distress of the poor. By a fixed rule of political economy, if workmen cease to spend money on drink their wages would, on the average, be reduced accordingly." Rather a strong assertion for a minister.

Mrs. Hannah Knappenberger, a widow 58 years old, was frightened to death at her home in Allentown on Thursday by her son. The wayward young man, who is 24 years old, had caused his mother a deal of anxiety of late and Thursday's lapse on his part brought on the fatal crisis. Edward did not come home to dinner as usual but turned up intoxicated about 3 o'clock. His mother upbraided him, whereupon he drew a vial of poison from his pocket and drank it. A doctor was hastily summoned and while he was trying to get the poison out of the young man's stomach, the frightened mother ran out of the house and fell in a faint in the yard. She was carried inside in an unconscious condition and died several hours later. The young man will recover.

Dr. Alexander B. Bruce, the distinguished Scotch scholar, delivered an address before the students of Garrett Biblical Institute, recently. Concerning the criticism of the Bible, Professor Bruce, who is one of the ablest of biblical scholars says: "I believe that after criticism has done its work the Christian people will be left with the conviction unimpaired that the Bible, notwithstanding all the characteristics which criticism has ascribed to it, is an altogether exceptional book in the religious history of mankind, worthy to be called the Word of God, and revered all the more that they are emancipated from a slavish literalism. That is my own experience in the critical study of the Bible; it is to me far more valuable than it formerly was. It establishes a hold upon me in a way that is irresistible, and I hope and pray that may be the result in the Christian community generally."

THE BEST FOR EVERYBODY

BECAUSE

It is easy to find the word wanted. Wordsare given their correct alphabetical places, each one beginning a paragraph.

It is easy to ascertain the pronunciation. The pronunciation is shown by the ordinary diacritically marked letters used in the schoolbooks.

It is easy to trace the growth of a word. The etymologies are full, and the different meanings are given in the order of their development.

It is easy to learn what a word means. The definitions are clear, explicit, and full, and each is contained in a separate paragraph.
